HIV / AIDS

In time for the 14th International AIDS Conference, the United Nations issued a sobering report in July warning that the global AIDS epidemic is still in its early stages and that 68 million people will die by 2020.

The conference, held in Barcelona, Spain, focused on money almost as much as medicine. Research was presented on young, gay Americans who don't know they're infected, the latest vaccine progress, the yearly cost of treating one patient with AIDS and more.

Currently Eastern Europe has the highest rate of infection in the world. Russia had 75,000 new cases by November 2001, a 15-fold increase in the last three years.

The epidemic continues its rapid spread through Africa, with 3.4 million new infections and 2.3 million deaths in 2001.

China recently downplayed a warning from the U.N. that the country was on the verge of an "explosive" epidemic, with the potential to infect 10 million citizens by 2010.

In other heavily afflicted areas, officials and activists are pressing for drug companies to waive patent restrictions or reduce prices. Patent struggles and generic drug conflicts have been reported in Brazil, South Africa, India and Indonesia.

Since September 11, the United Nations' global fund for AIDS relief has experienced a major decrease in contributions.

In recent United States news, two studies have shown that delaying HIV treatment can help those who are newly infected. HIV infection statistics, however, continue to rise among young gay men, particularly among men of color. This development, sometimes referred to as a "second wave" in the epidemic, has led to calls for increased vigilance about safer sex and HIV awareness

Epidemic Will Get Worse

A new United Nations report warned that the global epidemic is still in its early stages and could destabilize many regions in the next two decades.

"We haven't reached the peak of the AIDS epidemic yet," said Dr. Peter Piot, executive director of UNAIDS, the agency responsible for the report. "It's an unprecedented epidemic in human history."

The report estimates that 68 million people will die of the disease between 2000 and 2020 four times more than the number of deaths during the previous two decades. A record 3 million died of AIDS in 2001, and an estimated 40 million are now infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

The report, filled with grim statistics about the surging epidemic, was released ahead of the 14th International Conference on AIDS that begins on Sunday in Barcelona.

In an interview with Reuters, Piot warned that AIDS is no longer a medical problem; the epidemic is affecting economic, social and security concerns worldwide. He said the disease threatens to wipe out a generation in Africa and destabilize the continent.

"The world can't afford a whole continent to be destabilized because of AIDS," Piot said. "It's going to have implications for all continents."

In addition to warning about potentially disastrous outbreaks in China, India and sub-Saharan Africa, where 9 percent of adults aged 15-49 are infected, the report warned that unsafe sex practices in North America and Europe are triggering an increase in infection rates.

UNAIDS also appealed for more money from wealthy countries to fight the epidemic. Last year the U.N. set up a global fund for AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, with a target of spending $7 billion to $10 billion per year (until at least 2005) to halt the epidemic's growth.

Spending is expected to reach $3 billion this year, according to Reuters. For 2002, the U.S. Congress authorized only $500 million for the global fund.

Piot criticized wealthy nations for considering AIDS a "marginal problem" and not being generous enough.

"It's not asking for the moon," he said. "By any standards that are used for breaches in security, that's peanuts."

GRANNY PATCHES

It seems like only yesterday
 With mom and me she came to stay.
 In cat years, she was 49
 That black, and white, and tan feline;
 A blue-eyed beauty - fully grown,
 Who'd won awards when she was shown.
 Patches liked us from the start,
 And very quickly stole our hearts;
 But she wasn't fond of men,
 And gave them no cat-kisses,
 My step-dad once stepped on her tail,
 From then on - he got hisses.

Patty liked my room the best,
 And she became my special guest.
 I moved her toys and litter there;
 I served roast beef that mom prepared.
 She ate cat-nip, and things like that,
 But really was "a relaxing cat".
 Her favorite part of every day
 Was basking in the sunlight's rays;
 And every night as bedtime neared,
 On my pillow she appeared -
 To shower me with kisses there,
 And very gently lick my hair.

Our years with Patches quickly passed,
 I wished that they could last and last;
 But July third, two thousand one,
 I gave her food - and she ate none.
 I told her, "Mommy loves you so,
 And to the vet we need to go".
 She panted hard along the way,
 I said, "It's going to be okay".
 She meowed loud once - then dropped her head.
 The vet confirmed....my cat was dead.

When my Granny Patches died,
 For the longest time I cried ;
 She was a cat the day we got her -
 Who through the years, became my daughter.
